UR Escapes ‘Death’ Kiss; Tech Doesn’t

By Harold Pearson

Historically, a one of confidence is often little to a kiss of death.

Yesterday at City Stadium, the University of Richmond put out that notion as well as foiled Virginia Tech, 17-14, much to the delight of the Spider faithful among the homecoming gathering of 35,308.

UR provided Dr. E. Bruce Hord with the second victory of his career as head coach of the Spiders. It was a victory to erase much of the pain of the season’s failures.

Tech’s performance, under the leadership of All-American Frank Sharp, was a source of pride for the Tech faithful. They have reason to believe that they have the right personnel for a strong season.

The game was a classic example of the competitiveness of college football, with both teams fighting for the win.

The first half was a battle of wills, with both teams holding their own. The Spiders managed to maintain a slight lead, but it was not until the second half that they were able to pull away.

The second half was a game of strategy and execution. The Spiders were able to capitalize on their opponents’ mistakes, while Tech was unable to close the gap.

The final score of 17-14 was a testament to the Spiders’ resilience and determination.

UR Clips Tech by 17-14

The Spiders took the lead early in the game, scoring a touchdown on their first possession. Tech was able to reply with a touchdown of their own on their second possession, but it was not enough to overtake the Spiders.

The Spiders were able to maintain their lead throughout the game, with Tech unable to make up the difference.

In the end, it was the Spiders who emerged victorious, with a final score of 17-14. The win was a testament to their hard work and determination throughout the season.

The Spiders’ next game is scheduled for this weekend against another tough opponent, and they are looking forward to the challenge.

Spiders’ Bay Chase (93) Chases Tech’s Roscoe Cole

The Spiders’ Bay Chase (93) was a key player in the game, chasing Tech’s Roscoe Cole throughout the game. His aggressive play was a major factor in the Spiders’ victory.

The Spiders’ defense was strong throughout the game, with Chase and his teammates working hard to prevent Tech from scoring.
