The brilliant guard averaged 14.5 points a game as a freshman and followed it up with seasonal averages of 19.3, 18.2 and 24.1. He was Metro Conference Player of the Year in his senior season.

In some of his most impressive performances, Curry scored 41 points against Cincinnati in his senior season and had 38-point games against Michigan and Cincinnati and 36 against Florida State that same season.

Tech played in a post-season championship tournament every year Curry was a member of the squad. The 1982-83 and 1983-84 teams competed in the National Invitation Tournament, taking third place in 1984 at Madison Square Garden in New York. The next two years, the Hokies made the National Collegiate Athletic Association Tournament.

Curry's wife, the former Sonya Adams, also attended Tech and was a member of the Hokies' volleyball team during her undergraduate days. The Currys still reside in the Blacksburg area during the off-season.

The Second Century Campaign is a University campaign designed to raise $17 million for intercollegiate athletics at Tech. The drive started Jan. 20, 1990 and will run for three years and end on Dec. 31, 1992. More than $11 million of the total goal already has been reached.

Curry, a graduate of the University, currently plays for the Charlotte Hornets of The National Basketball Association. He capped his Tech career by making All-America in 1985-86 and his jersey, No. 30, officially was retired at the end of that season. The jersey now is displayed along with other retired jerseys in Cassell Coliseum.

Curry ranks second behind Bimbo Coles among Tech's all-time leading scorers with a career total of 2,235 points, an average of 19 a game. He also had a career total of 487 steals.
